We are not different

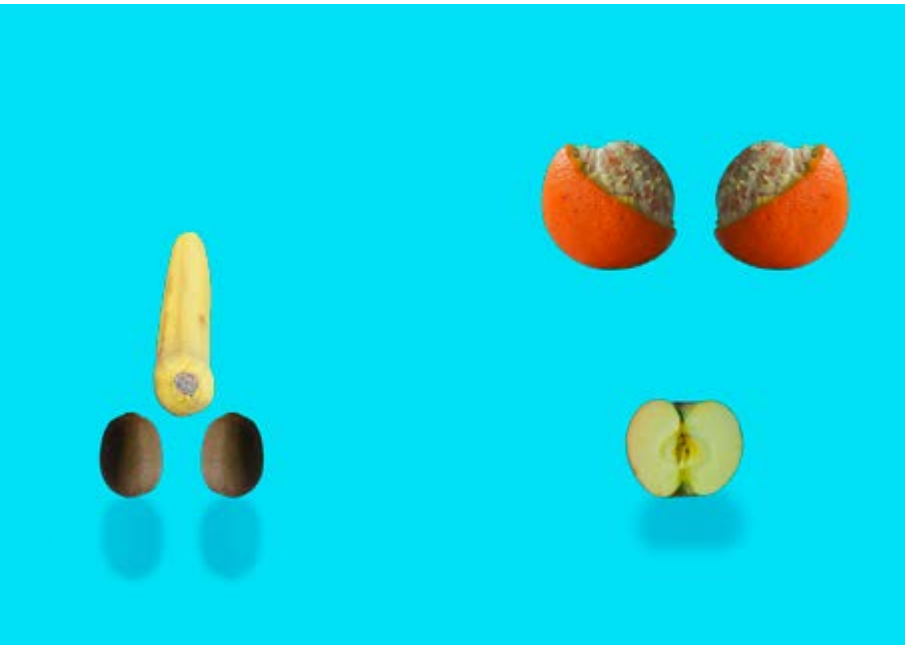
Using the aesthetic of soviet constructivism as cultural reference, this image shows us that all of us are equal despite having different things in our minds. We should not forget this, nor conceive disable people as strange creatures typical from circus neither see them from “out of the window”. We should focus on our similarities instead. Similarities like music.

Express yourself

Through the characteristics of Pop Art (use of objects of everyday life, high saturation, colourful elements, etc.), this image shows the work done in those places where people with problems are helped. There, repetition is the constant for achieving calm and the work done there is a way for them to express themselves.

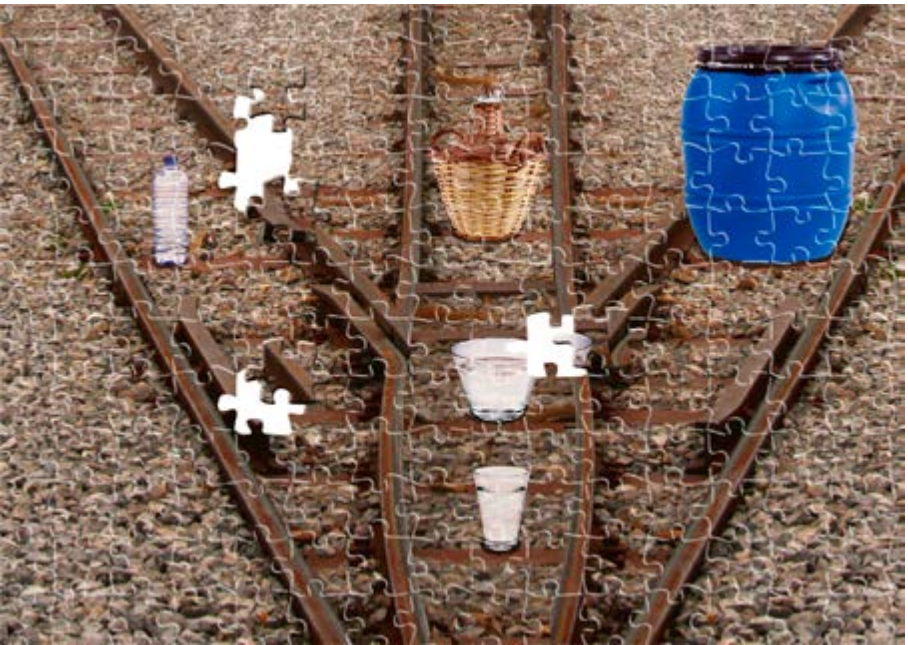
Inception

Employing typical Vaporwave elements, this image looks back ironically to the origins, the inception. The way for representing it is through parents who sometimes are a big help for disabled people but sometimes can be a problem and do not understand them but think they are strange creatures back of them. In addition I want to point out the paternalist perspective we, as society, have on them.



Sex

Using the technique of minimalism (representing the maximum possible with the minimal visual impact possible) this image wants us to reflect on the sexual life, something natural like fruit but a social taboo when it is related to disabled people as it is shown in the documentary Yes, We Fuck! (2015). Besides, some of them are forbidden to practice it even in a safe way.

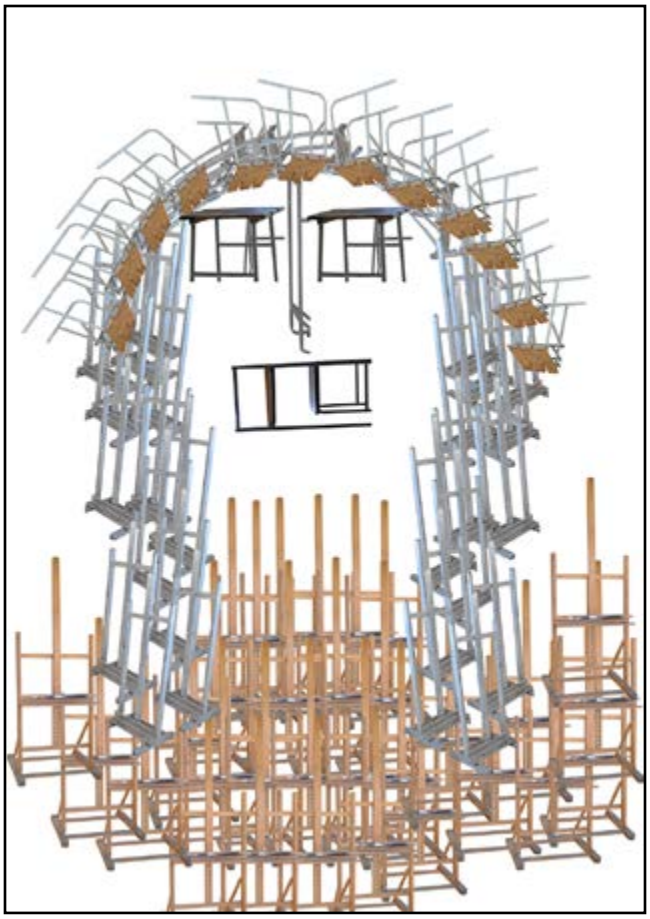


Therapy

Puzzles are part of our culture firstly because they are used to teach and secondly because they are representative of all of the main cultures in the world. But also puzzles can be used as therapy and improve capacities at the same time that opportunities are increased. The point is we do not consider people with problems may have special or hidden capacities because we do not allow them to show them.

Controlling

Many parents are used to control kids and not allow them to take their own decision and to grow as people. This becomes a problem when those children grow as they are not able of doing anything by themselves. Then, the problem about money increases and those old kids are considered a waste of money by parents and society.



Religion

Art Brut is a marginal artistic expression done by outcasts like disabled people for example. This image just copies this style since neither the technique nor the cultural background are the same. However it is as real as true Art Brut since it expresses the reality of many: attachment to hope and big influence of religion while many of those who are said Christians do not practice what they preach to them.
